Chief of Telegraph Division of Weather Bureau Victim of Heart Attack.

A widow, two sons, and three daughters survive him. The children are Carroll Moore, of Idaho; Theodore, Elsie, Alice and Florence.

Mr. Moore was fifty-five years old, and had been in the Government service thirty-seven years. He entered the old Signal Service in July, 1873, and was in charge of the military wires in Arizona, while Geronimo was on the watpath. He came to Washington in 1880, and has made his home here eversince. In 1880, when the old Secret Service was supplanted by the Weather Bureau organization, he entered the weather service, and was made chief of two ledges, the one-day September record for all time, and the mean maximum temperature for the first twelve days of this telegraph division in May, 1811.

Theodore T. Moore, chief of the telegraph division of the Weather Bureau, veteran of the Indian campaigns in the Southwest, prominent Mason, and one of the best known men in Washington, died suddenly of a heart attack in his office at the Weather Bureau this morning.

Mr. Moore had just reached his office a few minutes before 9 o'clock when he fell heavily to the floor. J. U. Moore, assistant chief of the division, was with him at the time. One of the physicians from Columbia Hospital, which adjoins the Weather Bureau structure, reached his side in a few minutes, but could do nothing for him. He died ten minutes after the attack.

ATTEND DEDICATION

Wilson to Witness Peace Tablet Ceremony.

A delegation from Manassas, Va.

who wished to invite President Wilson to attend the dedication of a bronze or them in all, is but 78 degrees, as compared with the mean for this month of 84.

The present September is running strong, however, nearing the half post, and if she finishes with a further mercurial (two ways) spurt the high marks may be ghattered. That the present pace will be held for a time, at least, is indicated by the forecast, of fair skies and no material change in temperature. There is no indication of a temperature change for at least thirty-six hours, and there is no assurance that the promised cold wave is not lost to Washington forever.

"Yes, your majesty, at length. She was but strolling about to pass the time during your absence. While I know little of such matters, it seems to me that the trials of the day have been extreme for her."

King Michael ended by asking the attendance of the young woman nerself; but it was just at this juncture that there arrived at the palace none less than the prefect of police, who made suppliance through several court officials for admittance to audence with royalty.

"He says," ventured the last chamberlain, "that he comes regarding the murder at the Ritz hotel, in which your majesty was graciously pleased to be interested."

"Yes, yes—my dear Count Frederick, it was absurd that you should be mixed in that—or the young American—I have not had time to think of it since then.

What is all this now? Bring the man in,"

And so presently the prefect, abashed and much perturbed was admitted.

Count Frederick considered for a moinent before he replied.

"Set him free," said he at length. "Watch him. He will lead us to something perhaps. Be sure that once he is loose he will not be at rest for long."
